12. He graduated (1921) from the Helsinki Polytechnic School. His first buildings to gain wide acclaim were a newspaper office and plant (1927-30) in Turku, notable for the use of tapered columns to support the pressroom roof, and the superbly sited Paimio Tuberculosis Sanatorium (1929-33), in which the patients' building provides, along with the most advanced hospital technology, such amenities as sunlit balconies with a fine view. For this and for many other buildings, he and his first wife, Aino Marsio, also designed all furnishings and fittings, often entirely of laminated wood. In 1935 they founded Artek, a firm. His int'l rep grew with his Finnish Pavilion for the 1937 Paris Exposition; the understated luxury of Villa Mairea (1938-39), built for a wealthy patron; and his innovative Finnish Pavilion for the 1939 New York World's Fair, with interior walls of undulating glass and molded wood. In 1940, Aalto was invited to the United States as a visiting prof at the MIT, where he remained for eight years and designed Baker House (1947), a striking serpentine-plan dorm. He returned to Finland in 1948 to head the planning office set up to rebuild that country following the devastation of WWII. His most impressive is Finlandia House (1967-75), the city's lakeside cultural center.

\(Hugo) Alvar Henrik Aalto(1898-1976)\

13. He was born in Hadley, Massachusetts, and educated at the U.S. Military Academy. During the Mexican War he was brevetted lieutenant colonel at Monterrey. With the outbreak of the American Civil War he was appointed brigadier general of volunteers, and in 1862 he became brigadier general in the Union army. In January 1863, Hooker was assigned by Abraham Lincoln to the command of the Army of the Potomac. The defeat of the Union troops at Chancellorsville in May 1863 was in large measure the result of Hooker's vacillation and inability to cope with the surprise actions of the Confederate leadership. In deference to Lincoln's lack of confidence in him and the pressure of public opinion in the North, he resigned his command of the Army of the Potomac the following July and was given command of the XI and XII Corps. He fought with distinction at Lookout Mountain, in the Battle of Chattanooga (November 1863), and was brevetted major general. In 1868 he retired from the army with the full rank of major general.
